

PHZ325E Philosophy of Language (Fall 2024)

Course Description

Can artificial intelligences (AI) perform speech acts such as assertion and lying? Do the outputs produced by artificial text generators have meanings? If artificially intelligences lack speaker intention, in what sense do human and artificial intelligences communicate with each other? This course aims to investigate these questions by looking at how philosophers understand such concepts as meaning, assertion, and lying, and by assessing whether and how these concepts apply to human-AI interactions.

Course Requirements

1. Class participation (20%): For every meeting, 1-2 of you will send to our class's chat group a question about the reading to be discussed. Examples of what your question can be about: the parts of the reading that you don't understand; your disagreements with the author(s).
2. Mid-term take-home assignment (20%)
3. Final take-home assignment (40%)
